

Kevin McCarthy: Are you Listening?

By ERIC CAINE, The Valley Citizen

“A stake was driven through the heart of American democracy on January 6, 2021, and our democracy today is on a knife’s edge.”

– MJ Luttig

When even Ann Coulter admits that Donald Trump is a grifter, there’s really no sense trying to convince those who still support him of the truth. Coulter is only the latest and most radical of nominal “conservatives” to dump Trump.

Conservative pundits like David Brooks, George Will, and Bret Stephens cut ties long ago. Even party mercenaries like Steve Schmidt and Rick Wilson jumped off the Trump train early on. None of them, however, has been able to loosen Trump’s stranglehold on the Republican Party.

Now, Michael J Luttig has shifted attention from Trump’s big grift to members of the Republican Party itself. Luttig is the retired Judge from the United States Court of Appeals whose conservative credentials are so strong he was on George W Bush’s shortlist for Supreme Court nominees.

Luttig’s measured testimony to the January 6 Committee on June 15 marked an inflection point in American history if only because he was able to speak truth from the disinterested perspective of a retired judge who holds impeccable conservative credentials.

“Donald Trump and his allies and supporters are a clear and present danger to American democracy.”

To witness someone who is aware he is talking to history while making history is thrilling enough in itself. But, especially today, to witness a true conservative who takes his mission for righteous justice more seriously than himself is like a watching an alien visitor from another dimension. Today’s Republicans — Josh Hawley, Marjorie Taylor Greene, Ted Cruz, JD Vance, Kevin McCarthy, Ron DeSantis — take your pick — never manage to achieve moral gravity because the ambition that inflates their lust for power also detaches them from foundational values of truth, integrity, and love of country.

Judge Luttig, on the other hand, has dedicated his life to those same conservative values. Valley Republicans who love their country need to do two things. First, reflect on Judge Luttig’s statement to the January 6 Committee.* Second, come to the defense of their country by repudiating Donald Trump and the January 6 Insurrection and agreeing that Joe Biden is the dutifully elected President of the United States.

As Judge Luttig says,

In order to end these wars that are draining the lifeblood from our country, a critical mass of our two parties’ political leaders is needed, to whom the remainder would be willing to listen, at least without immediate partisan recrimination. The logic for reconciliation of these wars being waged in America today dictates that this number needs to include a critical mass of leaders from the former president’s political party and that those leaders need to go first. All of these leaders then need to summon first the moral courage and then the political courage, the strength, and the patriotic will to extend their hands, and ask of the others — and of all Americans — “Can we talk? America needs us.”

Now is the time for Valley Republicans to come to the aid of their country.

Repudiate Donald Trump and pledge allegiance to the United States of America. Kevin McCarthy: Are you listening?

*Ed. Note: Readers, please read the full, eloquent remarks of Judge Luttig. His words are some of the most important you will ever read.

Police Oversight: Forward Together’s Final Recommendations

By JAMES COSTELLO

The City of Modesto’s Forward Together Work Group finished its work for police oversight and prepared a final report on June 15, 2022.

The Work Group’s report will be presented to the Modesto City Council on August 11. The Council will act on the recommendations on September 27, 2022.

Find the final report, extensive resources, supporting documents, and videos of all meetings at <https://www.modestogov.com/2733/Documents-Presentations>.

The Work Group recommends a combined model consisting of an Independent Auditor and citizens oversight committee based upon the successful model of the City of Anaheim.

ACTION: Please review the report’s details and lobby council members to support it. Attend the presentation to the Modesto City Council on August 11.

Our Open House: Thanks to All

By DAN ONORATO

Saturday, June 18. The weather was perfect. After days of sultry heat, a refreshing 78 degrees, with a slight breeze. For over two years of pandemic isolation, the Peace/Life Center Board had cancelled most of our projects and community gatherings. But this Open House marked a turning point. We were ready to get re-connected and re-engaged.

With postcards, emails, and telephone calls, we'd invited all our supporters, old and new. And to everyone's utter delight, many came and kept coming. And they didn't just drop by. They enjoyed being together again, updating with friends, mixing with new friends, and just absorbing the upbeat spirit of the event. They checked out our displays and Peace & Justice Boutique of T-shirts, books, buttons, and bumper stickers, and talked with the young people staffing the CJAN table (Climate Justice Action Now) or with representatives from Central California LGBTQ Collaborative, the Latino Community Roundtable, and the ACLU. Inside our office space, they looked at art for sale to benefit the Center and viewed our colorful wall decorations of timely peace and justice posters and our historical displays of the Center's active 52 years. They also enjoyed videos about the Center's goals and projects and especially appreciated a video of personal stories and statements explaining why the Center is important.

Developing community is vital to the spirit and commitment of the Peace/Life Center. In our very troubled society and world, we can readily feel disheartened. At times it's hard to keep the faith that humanity can do better. So, we need to be reminded that we're not alone. Others share our values and try, as we do, to live them. Together, we can make a difference. Our being together that beautiful Saturday morning, all reaching out to one another, all committed to our vision of peace and justice, was a joyous reminder of our need to connect with those who share our values.

Besides nurturing our community, our Open House aimed to awaken involvement. Over 35 people responded eagerly to volunteer for one or more of our projects. And among them were several younger people whose enthusiasm was uplifting. We look forward to their involvement being the first wave in a widening circle of commitment.

For everyone who came to the Open House, for all who filled out volunteer forms to get involved (we'll be in touch with you soon), and for all who helped make this memorable event a reality, on behalf of the Organizing Board of the Center, Thank you, Thank you, Thank you.

More specifically, special thanks to all who helped set up, staff tables, and clean up: Leroy Alford, Laura Stokes, Jim Abuan, Colleen Norby, Ricardo Córdova, Julie Reuben, Jim Costello, Bill Peck, John Frailing, David Tucker, Ken Schroeder, Mimsie Farrar, John Lucas, Kelly Villalobos, Marianne Villalobos, Drew Monson, Elaine Gorman, Robin Siefkin, MaryAnn Reynolds, Deborah Roberts, and Rachel Tyson.

Special thanks also to the community organizations who were present to share their information and good spirit:

CJAN (Climate Justice Action Now), Bianca López, Robin Siefkin, & Liz Kibler.

Latino Community Roundtable: Aaron Anguiano

Central California LGBTQ Collaborative, Irene Hooper-Gomez.

ACLU Stanislaus: Tom Crain.

And kudos with applause to Jocelyn Cooper, President of the Modesto Peace/Life Center Board, who got us started in planning and gave a warm welcome to all present and a brief explanation of the Peace/Life Center; to Karlha Davies who was our MC; to Wes Page who filmed and edited the video interviews and created the short clip on the Center's purpose and projects over time; to Linda Lagace who created the PowerPoint on the Center for the Peace Essay Contest Awards Ceremony; to Laura Stokes for organizing the benefit art sale; to Betty Gay who designed the new brochure explaining the Center's vision, history, and projects; to Bianca López who helped the planning committee; to Margie Lewis, who designed a postcard announcement of the event sent out on social media; to Saga Barberis, who designed a postcard sent out on email, updated and consolidated our mailing lists, and created on Google Drive a system to keep everyone on the Organizing Committee in sync in sharing new info; to Richard Anderson* whose video images preserves our memory of highlights of the Open House; and, finally, to the members of the Planning and Organizing Committee without whose dedication, creativity, and tenacity this Open House would not have happened: Ken Schroeder, Jocelyn Cooper, Jim Costello, John Frailing, Saga Barberis, and Dan Onorato.

The moral of these lists: it takes a community to pull off an Open House and, certainly, to create a more just and peaceful society. As Marian Wright Edelman writes, "It's up to us. It's up to you." Three cheers!

Amid Putin's Saber-Rattling, 65 Nations Condemn 'Any and All Nuclear Threats'

"We will not rest until the last state has joined the treaty, the last warhead has been dismantled and destroyed and nuclear weapons have been totally eliminated from the Earth."

By BRETT WILKINS, Common Dreams

Amid Moscow's thermonuclear saber-rattling during Russia's invasion of Ukraine, state parties to the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons on Thursday condemned "any and all nuclear threats" while calling on more countries to sign and ratify the landmark accord.

"This is the strongest condemnation of nuclear threats by a multilateral U.N. conference."

As the first Meeting of State Parties (1MSP) to the TPNW wrapped up in Vienna, the 65 countries that have signed and ratified the treaty issued a declaration and action plan unequivocally condemning threats to wage nuclear war, "whether they be explicit or implicit and irrespective of the circumstances."

The TPNW signatories committed to "further stigmatizing and delegitimizing nuclear weapons and steadily building a robust global peremptory norm against them."

"In the face of the catastrophic risks posed by nuclear weapons and in the interest of the very survival of humanity... we will not rest until the last state has joined the treaty, the last warhead has been dismantled and destroyed and nuclear weapons have been totally eliminated from the Earth," the declaration concludes.

Beatrice Fihn, executive director of the Nobel Peace Prize-winning International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN), said in a statement that "this is the strongest condemnation of nuclear threats by a multilateral U.N. conference, and shows an unprecedented commitment by a global alliance of states, survivors of nuclear detonations, international organizations, and civil society to prevent nuclear war and eliminate nuclear weapons."

Masao Tomonaga, a survivor of the August 9, 1945, U.S. nuclear attack on Nagasaki, Japan that killed more than 75,000 people, said that "this political declaration is a very strong document, despite many difficulties we face."

"With this powerful document we can go forward, and all Hibakusha support this; it is a great document," Tomonaga added, referring to the Japanese word for atomic bomb survivor.

The declaration and action plan comes after Russian President Vladimir Putin warned last week that his country could use nuclear weapons if its sovereignty is threatened.

With more than 11,000 nuclear warheads in their combined arsenals, Russia and the United States—the only nation to ever wage nuclear war—are the world's leading atomic powers.

Eighty-six nations have signed the TPNW and 65 have ratified the accord. Notably, none of the world's nine nuclear powers—China, France, India, Israel, North Korea, Pakistan, Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States—have signed the agreement.

Statement On The Existential Threat Of Nuclear Weapons And On The Treaty On The Prohibition Of Nuclear Weapons

From Tri-Valley CAREs

The power to initiate a global apocalypse lies in the hands of the leaders of nine nations. As 122 nations of the world indicated when they adopted the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in July, 2017, this is unacceptable.

As concerns about the threat of nuclear weapons re-enter the public consciousness, it is important to know that humankind is not without an answer to the nuclear threat. The Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons, which entered into force on January 22, 2021, provides a clear pathway to the elimination of the nuclear threat.

We call on all nuclear armed states to take immediate steps to:

- engage the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons,
- attend the First Meeting of States Parties, and
- sign, ratify and implement the Treaty.

We also call on the US media to recognize the existence of the Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons and to include the Treaty in discussions, articles, and editorials regarding the nuclear threat and methods available to address it.

Air District Board Approves Clean Air Rooms Pilot Program

Giving families free in-home air purifiers to improve indoor air quality during wildfires

The Valley Air District Governing Board unanimously voted last week to launch a pilot Clean Air Rooms program. The pilot program, which should open in a few weeks, will provide approximately 1,500 free residential air purifier units with one additional replacement filter to residents throughout Valley disadvantaged communities. The goal of the program is to help mitigate the harmful health effects of wildfire smoke on Valley residents, and in particular the District's most vulnerable populations. Residents within the District boundaries who reside within communities as defined by CalEnviroScreen (typically low-income underserved communities) will be able to participate and receive a portable air filtration unit to use in their home to help purify the air during episodes of poor air quality. Grants awarded during the pilot phase of the program will be on a first-come first-served basis, yet the District hopes to expand the program after this pilot phase. Residents interested in information about this program can receive information by signing up for the Clean Air Room: Residential Air Purifier Program email notification list.

"Smoke from severe wildfires can inundate the Valley and make its way into homes, causing health impacts to our most vulnerable residents," stated Samir Sheikh, Executive Director/APCO of the Valley Air District. "This program is designed to help families who may not otherwise be able to buy an in-home air purifier to protect their families during wildfires."

"So many Valley residents already face significant challenges with respect to environmental and economic disparities and then are subjected to major smoke impacts during severe wildfires" stated Dr. Tania Pacheco-Werner. "Community-facing programs like these provide much-needed tools during these critical times."

In a well-sealed indoor environment (e.g., windows and doors closed and sealed tightly), HEPA air filtration devices, such as those that will be offered under this program, can reduce particulate matter indoors by more than 90 percent. Use of air filtration devices to create "clean air rooms", such as a bedroom, will ensure that the home has a dedicated space with safe indoor air quality during smoke events.

Particulate matter can trigger asthma attacks, aggravate chronic bronchitis, and increase the risk of heart attack and stroke. Individuals with heart or lung disease should follow their doctors' advice for dealing with episodes of PM exposure. Those with existing respiratory conditions, including COVID-19, young children and the elderly, are especially susceptible to the health effects from this form of pollution. Residents experiencing poor air quality due to wildfire smoke should move to a filtered, air-conditioned environment with windows closed. Common cloth and paper masks being used as protection from COVID-19 may not be sufficient protection from wildfire smoke inhalation. For outdoor workers and other individuals that may not be able to remain indoors, state health authorities recommend the use of N95 facemasks as feasible.

For details on current and past wildfires affecting the Valley, as well as resources to protect yourself from exposure to wildfire smoke, visit the District's Wildfire Information page at www.valleyair.org/wildfires. In addition, you can access RAAN to check air quality at any Valley location on myRAAN.com or use the "Valley Air" app, free to download on any mobile device, and view the EPA's AirNow Fire and Smoke map <https://fire.airnow.gov/> for information regarding current air quality and smoke impacts. For more information, email: grants@valleyair.org, or speak to Air District staff, call 559-230-5800.

The Valley Air District covers eight counties including San Joaquin, Stanislaus, Merced, Madera, Fresno, Kings, Tulare and San Joaquin Valley air basin portions of Kern. For additional information about the San Joaquin Valley Air Pollution Control District, visit www.valleyair.org or call 559-230-6000.

How Climate Change Affects the Weather

Nathan Robinson

First Place, Division IV Peace Essay Contest

Sonoma Elementary School

Teacher: Gina Grgich

Tornadoes, rainfall, and hurricanes are becoming more common and dangerous. The cause? climate change. More active tornadoes, more and less rainfall in places that need it, and hurricanes are becoming increasingly more dangerous because of climate change. We need to stop this if we want to extend our lives on earth.

Scientists have been studying carbon dioxide emissions throughout history, and the 21st century has the highest amount of carbon waste in the air ever recorded. It works together with greenhouse gases, traps the heat that would have regularly been let out of our planet, and makes temperatures rise. Even though it's just a few degrees of difference, which we humans wouldn't notice, it has caused evaporation to happen faster than normal. Although it seems like nothing should change, it creates more downpours in places that have natural rainy weather, and even less in areas that are naturally dry. This causes floods and droughts everywhere in places that already have problems with rain-filled and dry weather.

This isn't just affecting the weather and climate. People's lives are being affected by these changes. People in places with common rainfall will have much more powerful and frequent storms, and people in places with less will experience droughts and lots of dry weather. With more storms and natural weather disasters, it would cause places to have flash floods, and overflow lakes and rivers, causing water to flood homes and cities in places such as the Midwest and northeast. On the other hand, places with dry weather naturally will have lots of droughts in areas in the southwest and northwest. As heat continues to rise, people would also be at risk of dehydration, heatstroke, and other things caused by lack of water and increased heat or extended periods of time.

We need to stop this before it gets worse by reducing our greenhouse gas emissions. If we can make our carbon footprint smaller, then these changes can stop, and our earth can get back to normal. We can reduce our footprint by recycling, using green fuels, and not using so many fossil fuels. We can also reduce it by limiting the use of gas-powered cars and other vehicles and switching to electric cars and bikes.

Our lives on earth and all the other living things on our beautiful planet will become extinct if we continue to destroy it. Tornadoes, hurricanes, and storms are going to get worse, and our lives are going to be horrible if we don't stop this. We must reduce our greenhouse emissions if we want to prolong our stay here. I urge you to reduce your carbon footprint by switching to an electric or hybrid car, try to recycle so factories don't overproduce, and use your bike or scooter more often instead of your regular vehicle. Just one person can make a difference and you can help stop climate change.

Keeping Workers Poor on Purpose Is Terrible Economic Policy

At America's biggest low-wage employers, chief executives now pocket 670 times more than their workers.

By SAM PIZZIGATI, Other Words

CEOs at America's biggest low-wage employers now take home, on average, 670 times what their typical workers make.

But we don't just get unfairness when a boss can grab more in a year than a worker could make in over six centuries. We get bungling and inefficient businesses.

Management science has been clear on this point for generations, ever since the days of the late Peter Drucker.

Management theorists credit Drucker, a refugee from Nazism in the 1930s, for laying down "the foundations of management as a scientific discipline." Drucker's classic 1946 study of General Motors established him as the nation's foremost authority on corporate effectiveness.

That effectiveness, Drucker believed, had to rest on fairness.

Corporations that compensate their CEOs at rates far outpacing worker pay create cultures where organizational excellence can never take root. These corporations create ever bigger bureaucracies, with endless layers of management that serve only to prop up huge paychecks at the top.

Drucker argued that no executive should make more than 25 times what their workers earn. And, in the two decades after World War II, America's leading corporate chiefs by and large accepted Drucker's perspective.

Their companies shared the wealth when they bargained with the strong unions of the postwar years. In fact, notes the Economic Policy Institute, major U.S. corporate CEOs in 1965 were only realizing 21 times the pay their workers were pocketing.

Drucker died in 2005 at age 95. He lived long enough to see Corporate America make a mockery of his 25-to-1 standard. But research since his death has consistently reaffirmed his take on the negative impact of wide CEO-worker pay differentials.

The just released 28th annual edition of the Institute for Policy Studies Executive Excess report explores these wide differentials in eye-opening detail. The report zeroes in on the 300 major U.S. corporations that pay their median workers the least.

At these 300 firms, average CEO pay last year jumped to $10.6 million, some 670 times their $24,000 median worker pay.

At over 100 of these firms, worker pay didn't even keep with inflation. And at most of those companies, executives wasted millions buying back their own stock instead of giving workers a raise.

Just as Drucker predicted, this unfairness has led directly to performance issues. Many of our nation's most unequal companies, from Amazon to federal call center contractor Maximus, have seen repeated walkouts and protests from justifiably aggrieved workers.

Lawmakers in Congress, the Institute for Policy Studies points out, could be taking concrete steps to rein in extreme pay disparities. They could, for instance, raise taxes on corporations with outrageously wide pay gaps.

But with this Congress unlikely to act, the new Institute for Policy Studies report also highlights a promising move the Biden administration could take on its own. The administration could start using executive action "to give corporations with narrow pay ratios preferential treatment in government contracting."

That would amount to a major step forward, since 40 percent of our largest low-wage employers hold federal contracts. If the Biden administration denied lucrative government contracts to companies with pay gaps over 100 to 1, those low-wage firms would have a powerful incentive to pay workers more fairly.

Various federal programs already offer a leg up in contracting to targeted groups, typically small businesses owned by women, disabled veterans, and minorities.

"Using public procurement to address extreme disparities within large corporations," the IPS report adds, "would be a step towards the same general objective."

And a step in that direction, as Peter Drucker told Wall Street Journal readers back in 1977, would honor the great achievement of American business in the middle of the 20th century: "the steady narrowing of the income gap between the 'big boss' and the 'working man.'"

Unequal Power: How the assumption of equal bargaining power in the workplace undermines freedom, fairness, and democracy

From the Economic Policy Institute

There is an inherent imbalance of bargaining power between employers and employees. There is, however, a pervasive assumption in ECONOMICS, POLITICAL SCIENCE, LAW, and PHILOSOPHY that this is a relationship of equal power. This wrong assumption diminishes our freedoms in and out of the workplace and undermines our legal protections in the workplace. It generates wage stagnation and inequality. And it undercuts civic engagement and representative democracy.

With the Unequal Power project, the Economic Policy Institute (EPI) sets out to shatter this assumption. To do this, EPI is bringing together new research across disciplines arguing that economic policy, employment law, philosophy, and political science need to return to the fundamental understanding of today's workplace reality of unequal bargaining power.

We need to shatter the assumption of equal power because...

It creates a lack of freedom in the workplace and beyond.

The assumption of equal power—the idea that if workers don't like a job, they are free to work elsewhere, and this prevents exploitation—enables employers to subject workers to private, authoritarian systems of power in the workplace and limits freedoms such as free speech beyond the workplace.

It undercuts employee rights and protections.

Courts use the premise of equal bargaining power—defying common sense and economic evidence—to justify limits to employee rights and protections, from at-will employment to forced arbitration in workplace disputes to so-called right-to-work laws. The equal power assumption limits constitutional, statutory, and legislative workplace protections.

It undercuts civic engagement and representative democracy and overlooks issues of workplace governance.

Without rights and protections, workers are unable to build the foundations of civic engagement at work through unionization and free communication. As a result, unequal bargaining power takes away workers' voices not only in workplace governance but in democracy itself.

It generates wage and income inequality and wage stagnation.

Equal power underlies the textbook idea of the perfect market, in which employers must pay competitive rates for employees. But the perfect market is the exception, not the rule. With disproportionate bargaining power, employers—not market forces—set wages, benefits, and job quality. Employer power has grown for the last four decades and the result is widening inequality.

It perpetuates systemic race and gender discrimination.

The equal power model presumes that discrimination can't exist in a competitive labor market because employers must pay appropriately competitive wages. But this disregards the fact that systemic racism, sexism, and lack of citizen status are decisive factors in workers' compensation and treatment—and makes it harder to hold employers accountable through bargaining and legal remedies.

The Unequal Power initiative will directly address all these faulty assumptions and establish the need to center workplace power in legal, economic, policy, political science, and philosophical analyses. This transformational shift is required to advance democracy, freedom, and economic fairness.

The Unequal Power project is dedicated to the memory of Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who recognized the inherent asymmetry between workers and their employers.

For workers striving to gain from their employers decent terms and conditions of employment, there is strength in numbers.

—Ruth Bader Ginsburg, dissent in Epic Systems Corp. v. Lewis

With a Foot in Two Worlds: One Valley Family's Story of a Dream Fulfilled

By TOM PORTWOOD

For Modesto Realtor Lourdes Bento, it all began by a far-away sea, where time itself seemed suspended in a chuva – a fine mist - of happy childhood memories.

Ms. Bento remembers the summers, watching her maternal grandfather, her Vovó, whom she adored, and the quiet sunny days she shared with him as he taught her all he knew about fishing. She remembers that he grew his own tobacco and also planted vegetables for the family table, as virtually everyone on São Jorge did, and still does. Ms. Bento remembers the warmth of the brick oven her family used for cooking, and the evenings filled with the music Vovó and her older cousins coaxed from their harmonicas. She remembers being transfixed by the ocean as waves crashed against the jagged outcroppings of her tiny island home.

Across the Atlantic, some 870 miles west of Lisbon, lies the Azores, an archipelago of nine volcanic islands that were first settled by the Portuguese in the 1430s, in the time of Prince Henry the Navigator. And this was where Lourdes Bento's family had lived for generations, forging an often hardscrabble life out of what nature had furnished them.

"We didn't have electricity or running water; maybe some of the wealthier homes had those luxuries," Ms. Bento further recalls about those early years. "If you needed to make an emergency call, the township had one telephone centrally located for that purpose. We went to the local chafaris – fountain - for our water, and people got around on donkeys or horses, or on foot. You used what you had available to you."

"My father remembers working from when he was 10 or 11 years old, and that was pretty typical for boys of his age, so very early on he was working hard on other people's land, basically working for his meals. Many of his friends didn't have shoes. There was hunger and poverty. So you grew your own food, or fished from the sea."

Born in 1970, Ms. Bento, the oldest of five children in her immediate family, would live on São Jorge until she was nine years old. The close-knit family ties, the wild, transcendent beauty of her Azorean homeland would always be close to her heart, but her mother and father knew that on the islands "there was only so much you can do," for a living and her father had "a passion to thrive and build a better life for his family."

And so, in 1979 the Bentos looked to America for that brighter future, arriving first on the East Coast, "where part of my mother's family lives in Rhode Island," before settling here in the Valley – first in Gustine, then Hilmar, followed by Stevenson, and finally Escalon.

In moving to California, the Bentos were becoming a part of a rich cultural heritage that has seen this state - and particularly the Valley - benefit immeasurably from the infusion of Azorean immigrants, with their strong work ethics and traditions of close community ties.

Over the decades, Ms. Bento's father toiled 16-hour days as he continued to work other people's land – on a dairy - his love for and dedication to his family always a beacon in the night, as he and her mother eventually saved enough money to buy a home. In the meanwhile, they watched as each of their children flourish in this new land so far from the one they had known all their lives.

"I think I grieve more for the islands now than when we first left them," Ms. Bento reflects. "I'm sure I missed my friends. And school was entirely different. Here, I was living on a dairy, surrounded by dry land, and on São Jorge I had a beautiful view of the ocean and the sky. So there was a grieving process I went through, but moving here was also an adventure – and that sort of offset the grieving."

It didn't take long for young Lourdes to adjust to the Valley, as she "learned a new language and just the everyday mechanics of life. That took me about two years."

"After you migrate here, you're kind of caught between two worlds" Ms. Bento explains. "Of course, you're involved with the local Portuguese community through the church and other activities and what's going on back on the islands, and that's good because the traditions keep growing stronger that way."

"But then you're exposed to the 'American' side of things, and that's mostly through school. School was very diverse, so that was pretty helpful. My father, though, always had a rule: Once inside the front door, you're Portuguese. He didn't want us to lose that. And he was wise to do that, because most of us are fluent in Portuguese to this day."

Four decades later, Ms. Bento looks back on the decisions her parents made with love and a deep sense of gratitude. "Now that I'm older I recognize their bravery in choosing to leave the country of their origin and come to a land where they knew so very few people. They moved us here based on a hope and a wish and a dream. That was very brave."

And for Ms. Bento's parents, the wish happened, the dream came true – their family has thrived here in the Valley, and their children are deeply rooted in their respective communities. Although for a time she moved away from the Valley, Ms. Bento returned many years ago to raise her son as a single mom, giving him the opportunity to know his Vó e Vô – his grandmother and grandfather, and to be influenced by them. "Family's important," she notes, as is community.

"In my opinion, some of the Portuguese traditions are stronger here than they are on the islands. Part of the reason why I think we thrive here in this country is that we came to an area where other Portuguese families had already settled and we helped each other out. And then we all participated in the Festas and other local community events to keep the culture and the old traditions thriving."

Ms. Bento readily acknowledges that she will always have a longing for the islands. "There's the Portuguese word Saudade – a word that's very hard to define or translate into English, but a longing, a yearning – that's what I feel for the Azores."

When she visited São Jorge and a couple of the other islands with her mother in 2015, "it was quite emotional for me. The second my foot hit the soil, it brought me to tears, I wasn't expecting that I also got to spend all that time with my mother in a way that I had never experienced before, as an adult. That was absolutely amazing."

"I was blown away by the raw natural beauty that's there, and the respect for environment that exists on the islands, that I don't see here in the States on a regular basis. The people on the Azores make do with what they have - everything is recycled and made optimum use of. Nothing goes to waste. If a tree falls, that tree is taken and turned into benches and table tops. Everything is repurposed. That's the one big difference that I saw. There's just more of a reverence and gratitude for certain things, for nature, and for taking care of it."

"On the islands, it was important to slow down. I saw that even in the way that they care for their elderly. And I understand – things are very fast-paced here, so you lose some of those connections and important rituals."

But while Ms. Bento knows she will always be emotionally pulled toward the Azores she is equally drawn back to the Valley, because that's where her family is, where the community she's grown to love and embrace still offers opportunities for herself and her son that wouldn't be possible elsewhere. "I see myself as being both Portuguese and American," she says proudly.

"I feel blessed that I have a foot in two different places – it has broadened my horizons as an individual. I have a strong passion for family and community, and I thank my parents for this. As a family and culture, we have always helped others as we could with what we had. For as long as I can remember, anytime I or others visit my parents, we are greeted with food, drink, and don't come home empty-handed. We are loaded up with produce from their vegetable garden and fruit trees. I think this comes from island living. You help each other to survive."

A Compelling Local Story: Benevolent Neglect and a New Poet

Michael Estrada, the son of a mother with an untreated serious mental illness presented his documentary film, Benevolent Neglect on Thursday May. 26 at the State Theatre. The film chronicled his family's struggle to get the help they desperately needed for her and did not receive.

Members of a panel, held after the film, told their own moving stories about how the mental health system had failed them. People in the audience joined in, often emotionally, recounting their own frustrations in their attempts to help their own children in a mental health system that is clearly broken.

One person who spoke up with a very moving poem was Ruby Hawke. Her poem (see next page), passionately proclaimed, "Do You See Them?" brought a standing ovation.

Stanislaus Connections is very pleased to feature Ruby as our Gathering of Voices poet in this issue.

What to Eat When You Don't Eat Animals! A Guide for Vegans and Not-yet Vegans

Originally created by Veda Stram in 1992, this revised and expanded 2022 version is the result of a collaboration with David Hoey/80spopanimals.com.

Submitted by VASU MURTY

This guide is for you if:

You are an animal lover and therefore want to eat in a way that respects ALL ANIMALS

You want to eat delicious, nurturing, inexpensive, healthy meals that are easy to prepare

You've always wondered, "What do vegans eat?"

You are vegetarian or already cutting back on eating animal products, and you want to go vegan but you don't know how

You think that you'll have to give up cheese, ice cream, and burgers if you go vegan. You will be amazed at all the scrumptious vegan versions of everything!

You want to improve your health and well-being, as well as the health and well-being of your friends, your family, other humans, and all animals=

You want to do your part to end our climate catastrophe

You are already vegan and always overjoyed to find more vegan goodies

You want to make a consequential difference for our world with every bite

To be clear, a vegan is someone who chooses not to participate in any form of animal abuse, exploitation, or slaughter, which includes abstaining from using, wearing, and consuming all animal products, such as dairy, eggs, honey, gelatin, wool, leather, silk, feathers, skin, and fur. Vegans avoid all forms of animal exploitation. Simply stated, veganism is not just about food: It is an ethical stance for total liberation of ALL CREATURES.

The Breath of the Dragon-A poem about addiction

Deep is the draw to the breath of the dragon

You can feel the burn melt the flesh at the nape of your neck

Yet there you still linger

Caressing the flames of the poisonous tongue as the sparks scar your skin

You linger

In the enticement of his mythical snare as your dreams become quicksand in a hypnotic snare of seduction, on a crumbling cliff, each swing brings you closer to death's final wish

Yet you hinder...

In the throbbing of his fire-breathing rasp, just one taste of relief but you know it won't last

Tame the torment and make it through another long night, for daylight brings the craving of an excruciating.

BITE of the vicious rattler constricts your waning soul, its

What you'll find here...

In this guide, you will find lots of ideas, menus, product suggestions, and advice about what to eat when you don't eat animals! This resource is designed to get you thinking about what's abundantly available for you to eat that doesn't come from unimaginable suffering and utter devastation. You might be amazed at how many fruits and vegetables you will learn to prepare in a myriad of new ways. Find links to thousands of vegan cookbooks and literally millions of vegan recipes online! That is, if you love to cook, which I DON'T.

This guide is about easy, delicious, satisfying vegan meals, and includes lots of menus, so that you can see how varied, satisfying, and "easy breezy" it is to be vegan. Also included are product brand names, which are in bold and linked to websites, so that you can order them online, find them at locations near you, and request that your local stores and restaurants carry them.

To the best of our knowledge, all products in this guide are vegan. We have included companies and brands that provide only vegan products, but, unfortunately, some of them are owned by corporations that sell animal products and/or test on animals; you will have to decide for yourself which brands you purchase.

In this guide you will also find powerful facts about the consequences of our food choices on...oh, just the entire world!

poison potent venom tricking your mind

It's gone beyond remembrance, your mirror bares your shame, as you dance along with demons on a snowy Summer

DANGLING down your mouth drop lies your shattered glass rock pipe, as you GASP for the escape from the anguish drugs have.

BROUGHT FORTH LIKE A BATTLE CRY OF A WARRIOR GOING DOWN!!

I'm still shuddering in defeat as I can still hear their sound...

"Mommy please stop using, won't you come and get me please!?"

Their cries remained unanswered for many years

As I lingered in the underbelly of the dragon unable to break free

– Ruby Hawke

DO YOU SEE THEM?

They are shunned. They are ignored. They are abused.
They are deplored.
They are Stepped on, Blamed on, Cussed on, Spit on, Kicked on, Beat on. Dumped on. Pissed on.
Hospitals won't keep them, so they are cast on.
Rehabs can't handle them so they are passed on Family won't accept them; Society disrespects them; send the police to collect them;
Refusing to help, they dismiss them, a forced compliance through handcuffed submission.

Why the hell you crazy? Go get yourself in check.
You ain't playing solid with a full constructed deck.
Grab yourself up by the bootstraps. Straighten up. You know you can.
Curtsy sexy like a woman...or proud and stoic like a Man.

Those voices you say haunt you... they're all up in your head.
Just make yourself act normal or we'll treat you like you're dead.
Society says how brutal. Your words, they sound so harsh!
Were tender with the sick and those bound by the dark!

But facts take the place of fiction. Call forth discerning eyes.
Let truth prevail plainly over societies unspoken lies.
A debilitating sickness we blatantly dismiss.
So wrongly diagnosed that so many go amiss.

Quick to label them dope fiends, causes more to be mislead.
Let's choose to bypass help and criminalize instead.
Roped off by shackles and hidden blocked doors,
Winged off in hospitals with shiny white floors.

White padded playgrounds of locked metal horror,
Fly by night doctors can't keep things in order.
Straight Jacket silenced and forced helmet heads,
County paid Shrinktown prescribes them more meds.

51-50 every month of the year.
Three days of lockdown....now kick'em out... they're clear.
Discharge awaiting....new script in hand.
Instructions to head on to pharmacy and stand.

Hit like a brick of undeniable reality,
Their fears have returned, so has their insanity
As their feet hit the sidewalk in anxieties pace
The voices return like a slap in the face.

Who the hell are you? Don't forget that I'm here.
I'm your biggest fucking nightmare...I'm your gut-wrenching fear.

Poke Poke...Pick Pick .
I ain't going nowhere, like a dog's relentless tick

I'm the devil in your head and the monster in your dark.
You catch me lurking in your sideview...jumping trees throughout the park.
As crazy as I make you, you pray for my depart.
I ain't going nowhere, we will never be apart.

Paralyzed by fear and expelled in deep defeat,
Imprisoned by the nightmares as they constantly repeat.
Plagued by constant worry and a torment that runs deep, Please someone just help them find a peaceful place to sleep!

But how do you talk reason when their behavior is bizarre?
Social norms crack convention when you're gone that far.
So where do they go? What do they do?
How do we offer help when they won't follow through?

Hard as they want to follow the rules?
The voices start rambling and chaos resumes.
The hear sounds of a needling Nelly of nagging necessity,
Or a rambling Roger of raging resistancy.

Nick pick slick flick,
Body contorts in unconscious tick.
Can't force prescription without crossing a line.
Insurance cuts the coverage,
Claiming everything is fine.

They cling to sanity on the brink of despair.
As we're busy pointing fingers, they're pulling out their hair.
There's no one easy answer...there's no one quick fix.
While LOVE is not the Whole Answer,
IT'S DAMN SURE PART OF IT!

Please close your eyes for me. I want you to visualize something.
A very busy downtown city street.
There is a homeless woman standing on the corner in a deep state of psychosis.
She is talking to herself...she is wailing her arms around...
she is screaming obscenities.
She is scared.

Now pay attention to the people who walk by her,
Some stare, some diverting their gaze, some whispering about her, laughing at her, pitying her,
Scared of her, hating her.
We are all familiar with this scene, right? Can you see the woman? Can you feel her?

Now I want you to imagine that every single person you just watched walk by Responded to her in love instead of fear with a "Hi, How are you?"
"Do you need help? I am here to help you. I really want to help you.
What is your name? What do you need? I LOVE YOU!"

CAN YOU FEEL THE DIFFERENCE? BECAUSE SHE CAN.

Ruby Hawke: a Voice for the Homeless and Mentally Ill

Ruby Hawke, age 44, was born and raised in Northern California. Once a college graduate on a fast track to corporate America, addiction would cause her life to take a tragic turn, as she would inevitably find herself strung out, homeless, and prostituting to survive. Leaving behind two kids, the streets remained her place of refuge for many years. Eventually, the harsh realities of homelessness would bring her to her knees, ready
to accept help.
Currently residing at the Modesto
Gospel Mission,
as she completes
their 18-month
Life Restoration Program.

Ruby's passion for advocacy
is fueled by her own struggles with homelessness,
drug addiction, and childhood sexual abuse. Spanning across six different states, many abusive relationships, rehab stints, jail time, and mental ward holds, Ruby's story is one of both heart-wrenching survival and heroic triumph. Brought to life in her delivery, she combines poetry into her writing as she bares her soul with a raw realism that will tear at the heartstrings of any listener.

With a particular focus on helping the homeless, and mentally ill, Ruby hopes to be a voice for those unable to find theirs. What she lacks in professional training she makes up for in hands-on experience; having lived on the streets and in the homeless shelter she still lives in today.
She hopes that her experience will not only help other suffering people but will serve as a guide to others on how best to help.

Editor's note: Ruby is a true inspiration and a walk-her-talk example of how to be in the world.

Addressing the White Male Governors of "Republican States"

There is no greater child abuse than forcing a twelve-year-old girl to carry an unwanted pregnancy to full term. No abortions? No exceptions for rape, incest, or childhood? You have no right to make that decision for any woman of any age.

There is no greater "discomfort" than the threat of an active shooter invading your school or neighborhood to kill students, teachers, or family unless it is being the actual victim of such senseless violence. Censor guns, not books. Books never killed anyone.

What greater mental health crisis is there than being born "atypical", already facing self-doubt, rejection, and physical danger, and then being told you are not allowed to talk about or read anything about your situation? Loving your neighbor does not exclude neighbors who aren't exactly like you.

What kind of egocentric, under-informed legislators would choose to do these things to children? Whose interests do they think they are they serving besides their own? They are guilty of abuse and don't even recognize what they are doing. Look at them. Tell them how wrong they are.

Biden Refuses to Mention the Worsening Dangers of Nuclear War. Media and Congress Enable His Silence.

By NORMAN SOLOMON

I've just finished going through the more than 60 presidential statements, documents, and communiques about the war in Ukraine that the White House has released and posted on its website since Joe Biden's State of the Union address in early March. They all share with that speech one stunning characteristic -- the complete absence of any mention of nuclear weapons or nuclear war dangers. Yet we're now living in a time when those dangers are the worst they've been since the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis.

You might think that the risks of global nuclear annihilation would merit at least a few of the more than 25,000 words officially released on Biden's behalf during the 100 days since his dramatic speech to a joint session of Congress. But an evasive pattern began from the outset. While devoting much of that speech to the Ukraine conflict, Biden said nothing at all about the heightened risks that it might trigger the use of nuclear weapons.

A leader interested in informing the American people rather than infantilizing them would have something to say about the need to prevent nuclear war at a time of escalating tensions between the world's two nuclear superpowers. A CBS News poll this spring found that the war in Ukraine had caused 70 percent of adults in the U.S. to be worried that it could lead to nuclear warfare.

But rather than publicly address such fears, Biden has dodged the public -- unwilling to combine his justifiable denunciations of Russia's horrific war on Ukraine with even the slightest cautionary mention about the upward spike in nuclear-war risks.

Biden has used silence to gaslight the body politic with major help from mass media and top Democrats. While occasional mainstream news pieces have noted the increase in nuclear-war worries and dangers, Biden has not been called to account for refusing to address them. As for Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill, party loyalties have taken precedence over ethical responsibilities. What's overdue is a willingness to insist that Biden forthrightly speak about a subject that involves the entire future of humanity.

Giving the president and congressional leaders the benefit of doubts has been a chronic and tragic problem throughout the nuclear age. Even some organizations that should know better have often succumbed to the temptation to serve as enablers.

They all share with that speech one stunning characteristic -- the complete absence of any mention of nuclear weapons or nuclear war dangers.

In her roles as House minority leader and speaker, Nancy Pelosi has championed one bloated Pentagon budget increase after another, including huge outlays for new nuclear weapons systems. Yet she continues to enjoy warm and sometimes even fawning treatment from well-heeled groups with arms-control and disarmament orientations.

And so it was, days ago, when the Ploughshares Fund sent supporters a promotional email about its annual "Chain Reaction" event -- trumpeting that "Speaker Pelosi will join our illustrious list of previously announced speakers to explore current opportunities to build a movement to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons once and for all."

The claim that Pelosi would be an apt person to guide listeners on how to "build a movement" with such goals was nothing short of absurd. For good measure, the announcement made the same claim for another speaker, Fiona Hill, a hawkish former senior director for Europe and Russia at the National Security Council.

Bizarre as it is, the notion that Pelosi and Hill are fit to explain how to "build a movement to reduce and eventually eliminate nuclear weapons" is in sync with a submissive assumption -- that there's no need to challenge Biden's refusal to address nuclear-war dangers.

A CBS News poll this spring found that the war in Ukraine had caused 70 percent of adults in the U.S. to be worried that it could lead to nuclear warfare. But rather than publicly address such fears, Biden has dodged the public.

The president has a responsibility to engage with journalists and the public about nuclear weapons and the threat they pose to human survival on this planet. Urgently, Biden should be pushed toward genuine diplomacy including arms-control negotiations with Russia. Members of Congress, organizations and constituents should be demanding that he acknowledge the growing dangers of nuclear war and specify what he intends to do to diminish instead of fuel those dangers.

Such demands can gain momentum and have political impact as a result of grassroots activism rather than beneficent elitism. That's why this Sunday, nearly 100 organizations are co-sponsoring a "Defuse Nuclear War" live stream -- marking the 40th anniversary of the day when 1 million people gathered in New York's Central Park, on June 12, 1982, to call for an end to the nuclear arms race.

That massive protest was in the spirit of what Martin Luther King Jr. said in his speech accepting the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964: "I refuse to accept the cynical notion that nation after nation must spiral down a militaristic stairway into the hell of thermonuclear destruction."

In 2022, the real possibility of such a hell for the entire world has become unmentionable for the president and his enablers. But refusing to talk about the dangers of thermonuclear destruction makes it more likely.
